About Me

I am Ramya Sriram, an award-winning travel, street, and cultural documentary photographer, visual storyteller, mentor, and social worker with over 20 years of community service. Alongside my photography, I have worked to raise awareness about child sexual abuse and supported children affected by HIV and single mothers through advocacy and community initiatives. My contributions to social service have been recognized by the Government of Tamil Nadu.

My work documents India's diverse cultural heritage, indigenous communities, and disappearing traditions, using photography to preserve history, inspire empathy, and create meaningful conversations.

I am passionate about mentoring aspiring photographers and storytellers through online and offline workshops, portfolio mentoring, and corporate training programs for organizations including HP and Naturals Salons. I have served as a Photography Mentor and Trainer at Cinema Factory Academy, Chennai, and conducted workshops for the Media Training Centre under MSME, Government of Tamil Nadu.

I have also served as a judge for photography competitions and as a guest lecturer at Vellore Institute of Technology (VIT), Cinema Factory Academy, and Velammal Educational Institutions, where I share my experiences in documentary photography, visual storytelling, and creative careers.

Media Features

My photography and social impact journey has been featured by leading publications and media platforms, including Asian Photography, Smart Photography, NDTV, Times Now, The Hindu, The Logical Indian, The Better India, and several other newspapers, magazines, and digital media platforms.

I believe photography is more than creating compelling images—it is about preserving heritage, amplifying unheard voices, and creating lasting impact. As a mentor, I aim to help others discover their unique perspective, strengthen their storytelling skills, and use creativity as a force for positive change.
